- Volume: This period average: 127 posts/day; Previous period average: 49 posts/day; Last 30 days average: 63 posts/day.
- Discussions around lowering the voting age remained popular on social media this week, primarily driven by news media coverage of the topic. Reactions to the idea were mainly negative.
- Reactions to an increase in the number of COVID-19 cases and new public health measures led many users to express anger towards governments. In turn, comments questioned electoral results and EC's integrity to explain their disappointment in GE44's outcome.
- Concerns over alleged Chinese interference in GE44 continued to increase following coverage of the CPC fears that Chinese influenced campaigns in 13 ridings. Most social media users commenting believe there was Chinese interference during GE44.

News article details survey on Canadian's lack of trust in EC and CRA cybersecurity

On December 9, CTV News published an article titled Nearly half Canadians lack confidence in cybersecurity of CRA, Elections Canada: survey. The article did not produce many reactions on social media, aside from one Reddit thread on r/Canada that generated 950 reactions, including 160 comments. Generally, reactions to the news were dismissive, claiming that asking random Canadians about cybersecurity did not mean much about the actual cybersecurity measures of an organisation. In general, people discussing EC's cybersecurity expressed trust in it because the core work of counting votes is still done manually with paper ballots, under scrutiny. The news died down in popularity over the following day and was no longer present in the environment as of the writing of this report.

More discussions about amending the CEA to lower the voting age to 16 were active this week, primarily driven by continued news media coverage of the subject. Reactions to the idea were very negative, with social media users often claiming that teens lacked maturity, and that "if anything they should raise the voting age." Others drew comparisons to other legal privileges determined by age, such as consuming alcohol, serving in

The recent increase in the number of cases of COVID-19 associated with the new Omicron variant and calls for kids to get vaccinated or adults to get a booster shot led the online discourse this week. This, in turn, generated anger and opposition to the current federal government. These posts, although attacking the government itself or sharing disappointment in GE44's results, led to several comments questioning the validity of the election. Although EC was rarely targeted directly, many claimed the election was "rigged," "fixed," or that machine voting or vote by mail were used to control the outcome of the election. One user claimed EC has not disclosed poll-by-poll numbers for election night yet, providing "no way to verify that the numbers the polls reported were the numbers they counted." Among social media users, lack of trust in public institutions often seems to translate in lack of trust in electoral results.

Faits saillants sur les médias sociaux / Social media highlights Recent news coverage that the Conservative Party believes 13 ridings may have been the target of foreign influence by China during GE44 has kept the topic in the social media spotlight. Reactions to the news generally are that there was foreign interference, and China is currently the only country mentioned. Opinion is split as to whether social media users think the Chinese influence was welcomed by opposing politicians or not. Surrounding the U.S.-hosted democracy summit that Taiwan was invited to, China has stepped up efforts to discredit western democracy over the last month. A TikTok account from central China reposted a video uploaded by Canadian YouTuber Gweilo 60 shortly after GE44, in which he criticized western democratic elections and praised the Chinese government. The video had previously been reposted on YouTube by China Global Television Network, state media from China. Comments largely agreed with the Canadian YouTuber, and stated that democracy in the west does not result in representative or effective government. Many commentators asserted the original vlogger and the accounts reposting the video were part of the Chinese propaganda machine.
